This paper is devoted to the EU legal framework in the field of regulation legal labour migration of third countries nationals. Lately this issue has become one of the most debatable topics in European Union due the migration crisis, processes of globalisation. By examining the relevant provisions of secondary law of the EU, as well as the caselaw of the Court of Justice of European Union (hereinafter — CJEU), author comes to the conclusion that European Union Institutions an competent bodies should change their approach when it comes to labour market needs. Migration crisis of 2015–2019 has shown the need of development and further adoption of general migration policy on supranational level with particular migration on labour migration regulation. It is crucial to improve the integration programmes for migrants in the host countries. There is also a demand for the development of online platforms and tools helping potential migrants to better integrate, which could be similar to European Job Mobility Portal (EURES).
